Art Activities: Strengthening Relationships
While Supporting Preschoolers Development

Spending quality time together is important for every parent-child relationship. Art experiences at home can serve to provide joyful opportunities to explore, discover and create together. Also, these activities support children's social –emotional and cognitive skills; all so necessary for school readiness and successes in the school years to come.

Please join the Institute for Parenting for a discussion of creative art processes that can be implemented at home. Drawing, painting, collaging as well as sensory experiences (finger-painting, "goop" and playdoh) will be presented.

Parents will learn how creating together supports your relationship as well as how these activities help enhance children's social, cognitive, language and motor skills.

* Please note: Children will be having their own fun in a different room for childcare

Eileen Leibman, M.A. currently works as an Early Intervention Specialist working with young children, teachers and parents. She has spent her career as a mainstream and special needs preschool teacher, art teacher and therapeutic art specialist.

**The Parent Coffee Series is an Educational Series for parents with children age 6 and under*
